Shapes

- Logo design - refine a series of concepts, simplify complex information into an easily consumed visual nugget.
- Circles, squares, triangles and other geometric shapes have been serving as building blocks & enclosures since the origins of design.

Circle

It represents international or global concerns.

It represents the Earth or linkage between people.

It could be as small as a molecule or as large as the universe.

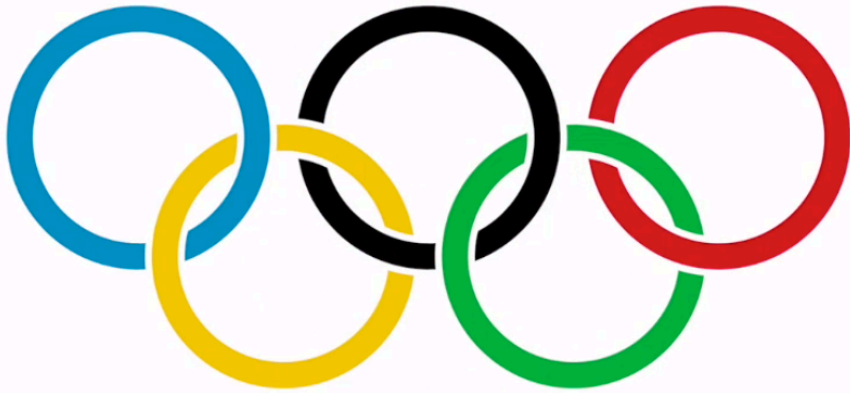

Ring shape

Rings have always carried a mystical, almost magical, quality to them.

Or a portal.

Squares

Squares

- Square becomes somewhat of a metaphor for man, and progress.
 - It is very stable and provide equal proportions
 - It represents structure or a house or a container.
- It might mean the security of the area, as if it's a safe, or protective shelter created by man.

Triangles

Triangles

Triangles are not the friendliest of shapes.

*Structurally, they're considered very strong,
but the corners on an equilateral triangle are relatively sharp.*

Triangle

- Play button, and universal sign for moving forward
- A triangle sits on a flat bottom, it conveys the idea of ultimate stability.
- A upward pointed triangle is also the Greek letter delta, is the universal symbol for change in science, or finance, or math.
 - Pyramid
- upside down triangle - universal sign for dangerous/warning

Anthropomorphism

loose translation of the word means interpretation of human characteristics in something that is not human, like a god, animal, or object.

Team logos, mascots and company emblems are selected because they represent the essence or the personality of the client.

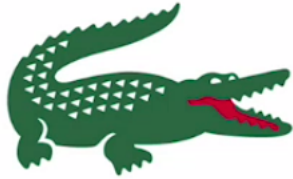

Look at the following animals, and think about their personality, and see just how different the feel is that they convey.

Animals: An amazing shortcut!

As a designer, all these implied equities and preconceptions can do 80% of the lifting for us if handled properly.

Case study

What this blue bird implies?

- Bluebirds tweet,
 - viewed as an omen of good luck worldwide,
 - the bird is winged, quick as a messenger.
- It's not challenging or cunning like a hawk or a falcon. And it doesn't carry the stigmas of a pigeon.

And this list could certainly go on. But, are you starting to see how this works? You already know all of this information.

Brainstorm more birds

- * Ducks: water, water proof, all terrain, migratory, flocks
- * Penguins: cold, formal b/w, swimmers, cute
- * Dove: peace, love, Christian, purity, white
- * peacocks: colorful, proud, show-off, loud, beautiful
- * Falcon: aggressive, hunter, great eye sight, sport of kings
- * Chickens: eggs, dinner, weathervanes, alarm clock, farms, country
- * Hummingbirds: nimble, hovering, fast, flower lovers, tiny

*Let's look into more similes.

- * One of the reasons animals make such a rich source of visual analogies for design is because they're woven into our culture.
 - * From the bedtime stories to the literature our popular culture is based on.
 - * Mythology of many cultures, especially Greek mythology.
 - * The designer's trick is to allow animals to possess their own superpowers is what we call a transformation, winged horse that stood for Mobil Oil for years was actually named Pegasus.

Mercury was a messenger for the gods, wearing wing feet and a helmet. So, think of him as the communications infrastructure for the gods.

*Starbucks logo: mermaid?
She has a split tail which makes her a siren,
capable of creating such a beautiful sound,
that no man could ignore her.*

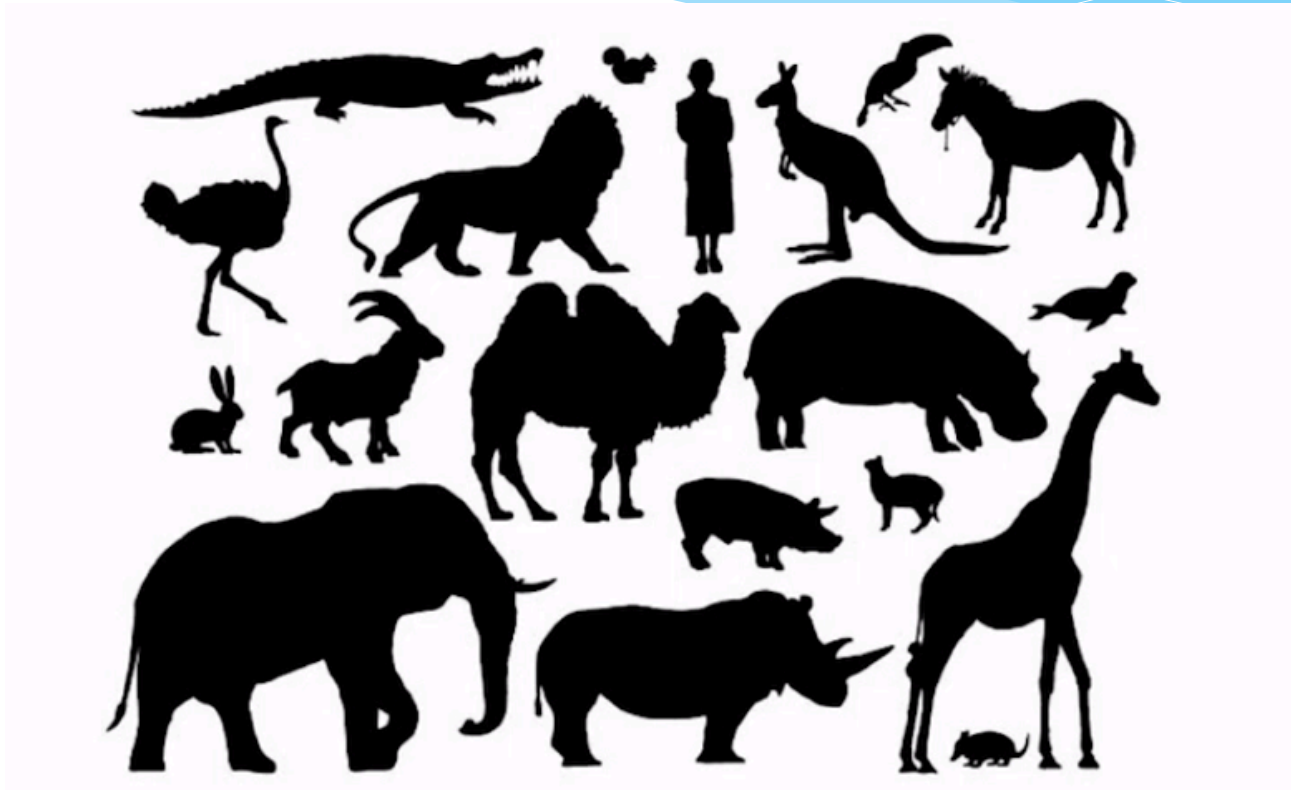

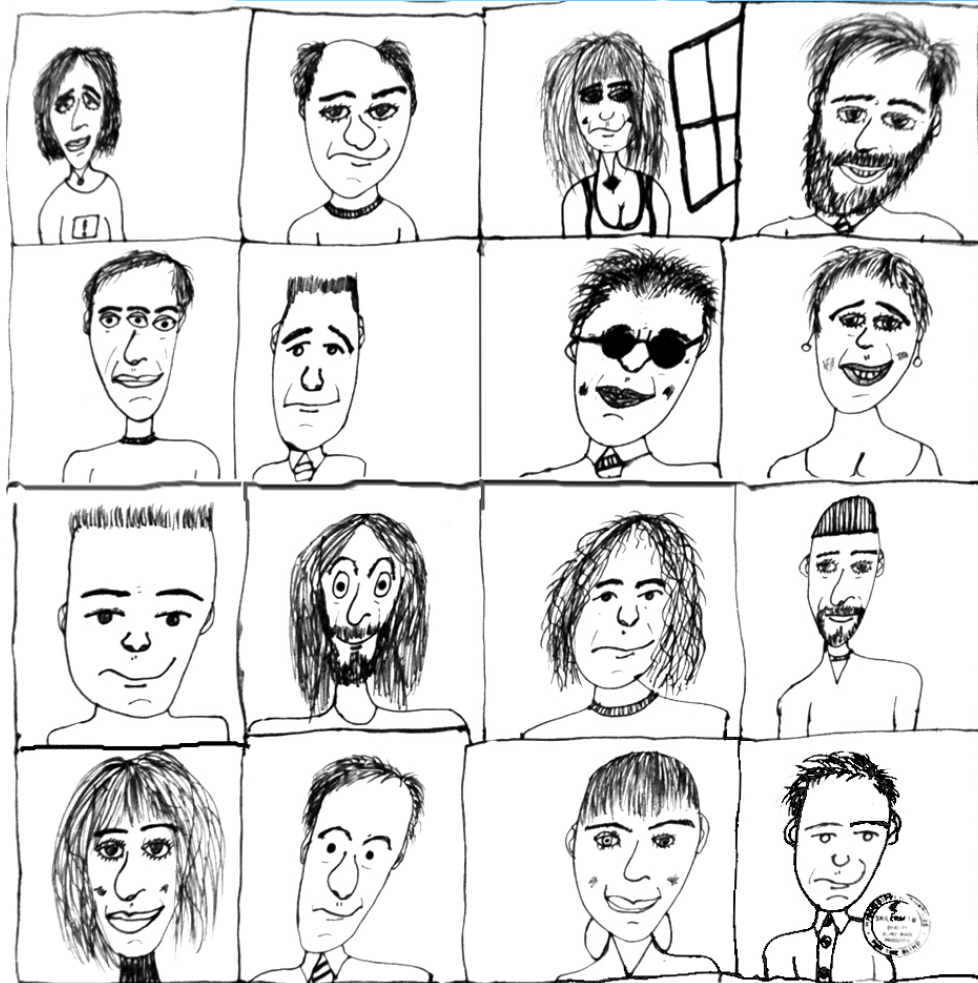

The ability of the designer, Eugene Kolkey, to personify the Tiger with a scarf, a winning smile, and human characteristics, turned him into a breakfast buddy as opposed to a menacing carnivore.

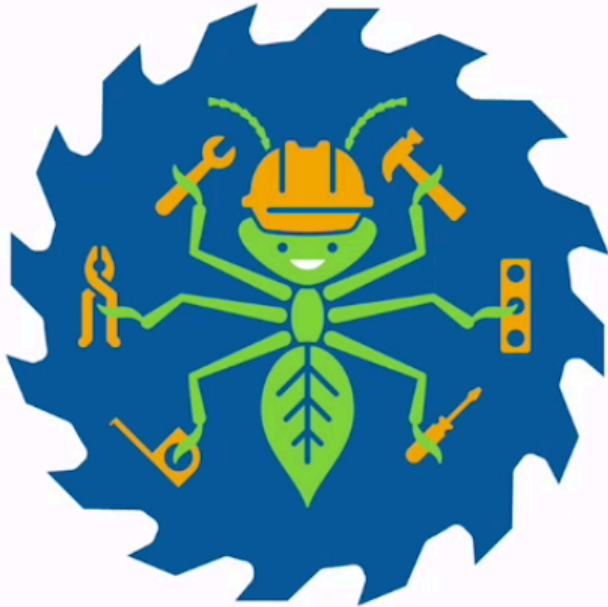

When you ask someone to draw a picture of a certain animal they will almost always draw it in profile, a side view.

When you ask someone to draw a person, they will almost always draw from a head-on perspective and not a profile.

Trick: try putting an animal into a head-on position if using it in a personification design.
